DONOVAN >>> Chess player and pianist
Learn what makes a leader.

Ever since chess caught his eye as a fifth grader, chess moves. Donovan Wu '21 has nurtured a growing interest in the game, eventually prompting him to co-found a club for chess lovers to gather during his freshman year.

Now, his co-founder is in college, and Donovan said that his new position as the sole leader of the club taught him a lot about time management.

"I have to make the most use of my time wherever I am," Donovan said. "I break all my time into chunks so I can finish everything, take a five minute break, and keep going on."

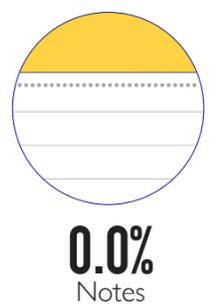

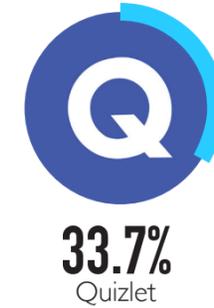

He said this chunk strategy helps him learn material ranging from school work to competitive

"For about two years I wasn't making any progress in chess so I practiced my tactics and improved my openings a bit and I was able to up my ranking by a few hundred points," Donovan said.

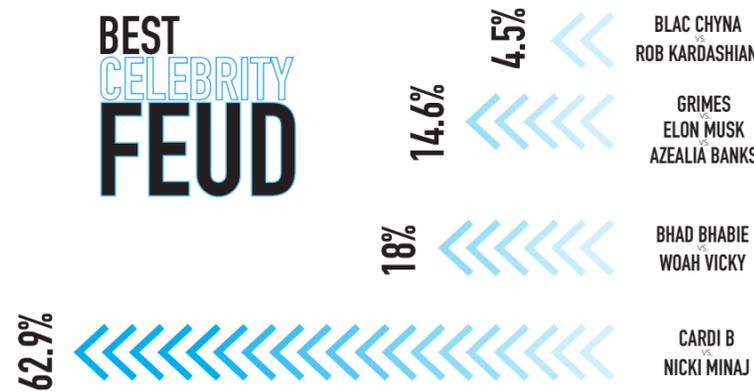

He said that his improvement in chess came from a change in his attitude. He began to analyze and follow his past chess maneuvers to identify where he could improve, which put him ahead of his competition.

"You need to be organized and keep track of everything you're doing," Donovan said. "If you don't do that, you're going to end up behind."

<<< MARY ELIZABETH

Although she said she was always athletic in Middle School, it wasn't until after Mary Elizabeth "M.E." Gabrielle '21 spent her seventh grade summer rowing by the school boathouse that she fell in love with a sport.

"I keep involved with crew because I just love the team aspect of it," M.E. said. "I'm becoming so close with all the people on the team."

M.E. has crew practice six days a week and morning practice in the weight room two days a week, so she said the most important lesson crew taught her is how to prioritize her time.

"I always make sure to use my time during my free periods really well to get all my homework done to make sure I don't have tons of work at night to do," M.E. said.

This allows her to get enough sleep to work out well at morning practice. However, she said she couldn't even get to morning practice without her family.

"My family's really supportive and I can't drive yet so my family always drives me to morning practice," M.E. said.

She said her family plays an integral role in her success and credits her interpersonal relationships with giving her motivation for both school and crew.
